

My idea is a website dedicated to telling the story of the National Football League's 2012 season AFC Divisional Round matchup between the Baltimore Ravens and the Denver Broncos. By using visuals with fixed positions and scroll-heavy web pages, I will be able to create a fun and interactive way of immersing the audience in the "Mile High Miracle."

The 2012 AFC Divisional Round game between the Baltimore Ravens and the Denver Broncos took place on January 12, 2013, and is commonly referred to as the "Mile High Miracle" because of the unbelievably rare things that happened during the game as well as the crazy result. This game ended up going to double overtime because of the Baltimore Ravens' last-ditch effort to tie the game against the heavy favorites, the Denver Broncos. With a minute left in the 4th quarter, Quarterback Joe Flacco threw an unreal 70-yard pass to Wide Receiver Jacoby Jones, which eventually led to Baltimore's rookie kicker Justin Tucker kicking the game-winning field goal to give the Ravens the hard-earned win with the final score of 38-35.
