

In my art show I am showcasing manga/illustration. The names of the artists included are Kamome Shirahama, Tatsuki Fujimoto, and Tsutomu Nihei, and will focus on one of their works each. The show will be located here in Baltimore at the Baltimore Museum of Art. The theme of the show is about manga spreads and the artistry that goes into creating dynamic scenes that complement the medium, all while working alone. A possible title for the show would be "Splash and Spreads: Breaking the Frame". The website will likely be made to match the black and white style of the manga pages it is showcasing, using thick frames when possible, for different elements. To have some amount of color, the center of the page will likely have a white background to allow for something to pop on either side of the content, though, it still being subtle enough to not take away from the contents.
